Excerpt: . . . 11 unattractive to terrorists, and thereby reduce the possibility of threat associated with their misuse. The Congressional Research Service reported that typical general aviation aircraft are too light to use as a platform for conventional explosives. Moreover, heightened vigilance among airport operators and pilots would make it difficult to load the necessary quantity of explosives without detection. The report concluded that, as a plat-form for conventional explosives, the threat posed by light general aviation aircraft is relatively small compared to the threat posed by trucks. We are aware that our report may be used by those who are ar-guing either for or against a particular piece of regulation. We dont believe that our report is extensive enough to support such a debate. One of the most frequently quoted sentences from our re-port is, General aviation presents only limited and mostly hypo-thetical threats to security. We believe this to be true. More im-portantly, it is consistent with the threat information we reviewed. We have been forthcoming about the scope of our field work and about the goals that we established for this inspection. We had no bureaucratic inclination to dismiss the concerns expressed by the KHOU broadcast. A cynic can always wonder whether the DHS in-spector general report would go easy or whitewash a DHS program. But DHS managers will tell you otherwise. Madame Chairwoman, this concludes my prepared remarks. I would be happy to answer questions that you or the subcommittee have. The statement of Mr. Mann follows: P S C I. M REPARED TATEMENT OF ARLTON ANN ULY J 15, 2009 Good afternoon, Madame...
