Cannonading and musketry heard westward, in direction of Jonesboro, on the railroad. Are the rebs retreating down the railroad? Push em back, Uncle Billy, push em back; push era south of our position, anyway. The day passes, and so do great expectations. Not a soul passes on the road--everybody willing to stay at home; all seem tremblingly awaiting developments. Freemans extra proud of their guest, in whose presence they feel protection and favor from the enemy. Getting quite aristocratic now--sleep under a roof. Sunday, September 4.--Greater excitement. Yankees certainly coming --rebels demoralized, and falling back. Along the roads and lanes, and scattering through the woods and fields, straggle the defeated and disheartened Confederates; no longer an army--no longer an organization--disconnected and dispirited mob; devil-may-care airs--every man his own commanding officer j woods decidedly unsafe for blue cloth. The Freemans...
